The Season Is On: A Masterpiece of Timing

By Lenny Anderson

It took a while, some five weeks to be roughly specific, but the Pacific Coast League season is officially open. A manager has been dumped.

GEORGE METKOVICH

Bob Elliott, the former great National League slugger and more recently manager of the San Diego Padres, was dismissed from the latter post by Ralph Kiner, the former great National League slugger and now the Padre general manager, and was replaced by George (Catfish) Metkovich, the former National League singles hitter.

There had been a number of clues pointing to Elliott's ultimate fate. Many league observers hardly could bring themselves to raise an eyebrow when the word was passed the other day.

There was, to start with, the matter of San Diego's seventh-place finish in 1956.

Added to that fact were reports that Kiner's attitude toward Elliott was distinctly cool. The Cleveland Indians, who have loaded the Padres for bear this season, were said to share that coolness.

A Logical Fall Guy

YOU may recall that, when Cleveland and San Diego made their working agreement last winter, Kiner was the first to hail the move as the key to the pennant for the Padres.

When, in the wake of that announcement, San Diego proceeded to spend the first month in the second division, it was obvious that someone had bungled. Those versed in the ways of the brotherhood of former National League sluggers had a pretty fair hunch as to who would take the rap.

It is our opinion that in his first year as a P. C. L. manager Metkovich will make his mark.

As Seattle fans who saw the Padres defeat the Rainiers in five games out of seven are aware, San Diego has the makings of a contending ball club. The Padres' pitching was about as good as any the Rainiers have been permitted to gaze on wistfully all season.

Further, shortly before Elliott's dismissal, Cleveland sent the Padres four more ballplayers, making Kiner's preseason pennant talk all the more convincing. If Robert was to be dumped, now was the hour.

A Good Kind of Trouble

METKOVICH'S first chore will be to separate the good ballplayers on his club from the outstanding ones and he can pass a lot of that work along to Kiner, though Ralph never has had exactly that trouble before as the Padre general manager.

As we see the situation, it does not lie beyond the realm of possibility that the Padres will win the pennant and that Metkovich will become the Manager of the Year in his first season as a Coast League thinker. Certainly, no casual observer could deny the Catfish the title if the Padres should start to win, now that he has taken over, loaded.

As far as that goes, it is not impossible that Elliott could have won the pennant, too, with the team that finally was put together just as he was invited to step down.

In that case, Robert would have become one of the leading candidates for Manager of the Year honors, too.

But now, of course, he must be regarded as highly ineligible.

Rainiers, Mounties Clash Here Tonight

By LENNY ANDERSON

With one player coming, two going and Joe Taylor riding a home-run streak four games long, the Seattle Rainiers open a seven-game series against Vancouver's vastly improved Mounties tonight in Sicks' Stadium.

The Seattle infield, one of Manager Lefty O'Doul's principal spring-training worries, continued its steady evolution toward the new look yesterday. The infield taking shape differs at two of four positions from that which started the season for Seattle.

Luttrell Due Tonight

The newest change brings Lyle Luttrell, 27-year-old infielder, from the Washington Senators on option, and sends Leo Righetti, the 1956 shortstop who has handled second base this season, to Sacramento in a straight cash deal.

Artie Wilson, utility infielder, also was sold to the Solons yesterday.

Rain canceled last night's scheduled Empire Day double-header between Seattle and the Mounties in Vancouver.

Taylor, rediscovering the home-run touch after a week-and-a-half lapse, blasted one homer in each of the last four games in Hollywood an increased his league-leading total to ten.

The Seattle manager was greatly encouraged by the Rainiers' mass withdrawal from extended batting slumps during the final game against the Stars.

Glynn Banged Ball

Bill Glynn enjoyed a strong series from start to finish, with 11 hits in 28 trips. Taylor, Hal Bevan, and Jim Dyck all were whacking the ball with authority during the week-end games.

Red Munger, who saw a three-game winning streak snapped last week against the Stars, will attempt to start a new one in the starting role against Vancouver tonight. Charlie Metro, Vancouver manager, has nominated George Bamberger (5-2).

Stadium fans will find the Mounties a far different club from the one that finished eighth last season.

Only yesterday, the Mounties acquired Don Ferrarese, highly promising left-handed pitcher, from Baltimore on option.

Seattle will enter the series without the services of Dick Aylward, catcher. Aylward suffered a fractured finger in Sunday's nightcap.

Hanlon, Daniels Pace Coast Pitchers

SAN FRANCISCO, May 21.—(AP)—A pair of right-handers, Dick Hanlon of Los Angeles and Ben Daniels of Hollywood, led Pacific Coast League pitchers through last week.

Hanlon posted a 5-0 record with the lowest earned-run average in the loop, 1.54. Daniels has the most victories in the league, six, against no setbacks.

TAYLOR LEADS — SAN FRANCISCO, May 21.—(AP)—Veterans Frank Kellert of San Francisco and Joe Taylor of Seattle pace the Pacific Coast League batters.

Statistics, including Sunday's games, put Kellert ahead in percentage and hits, with .359 and 51. Taylor is in front for runs batted in and homers, 34 and 10.

Arcaro Let Bold Ruler Run Own Race in Preakness

By RED SMITH

NEW YORK, May 21.—Riding home from the Preakness, a man asked Eddie Arcaro what had happened in the two weeks since the Kentucky Derby to convince him that it was he, the rider, rather than Bold Ruler, the horse, who had failed at Churchill Downs.

"You now are saying that you got the horse beat in Kentucky," the man said. "If that's so, where do you think you made your mistake? Fighting him too hard in the first quarter mile?

"Exactly," Eddie said. "You see, before the Derby, Mr. Fitz and I felt the main one we had to beat was Gallant Man. We thought we could take Federal Hill any time we wanted to, and we weren't too much afraid of Iron Liege, because we had always beaten him.

"So it seemed to us it would be foolish to use up Bold Ruler running with Federal Hill and let Gallant Man come on at the end to nail both of us. 'Take back off Federal Hill a little,' Mr. Fitz told me, 'Let him go out on the lead if he wants to.'

This Is His Business

"That's what I was trying to do on the first run past the stands, but Bold Ruler went into the clubhouse turn like a wild horse. He was so full of run he could have gone right on past Federal Hill; I should have let him do that, but it wasn't until then that I realized I was fighting him too hard.

"By then it was too late because we were already into the turn and there Federal Hill bore out. I had to take Bold Ruler back off his heels and outside, so I couldn't let him do his own running until we were straightened out on the back side.

"Then he was empty. I'd discouraged and confused him by fighting him when he wanted to run."

"You Were Mystified"

"You didn't seem to think so in the jocks' room right after the Derby," Arcaro was reminded. "You were disappointed and mystified because the horse was through after a mile, but you didn't seem to think you were to blame."

"I suppose not," Eddie said, "but this is my business and when something like that happens you try to analyze it afterwards. He'd always taken those other horses whenever he hooked 'em. It had to be that I fought him too hard."

A fellow recalled that, on the day before the Derby, Jim Fitzsimmons had reported Bold Ruler fit and added that he thought the colt was better than he had ever been in his life.

"He could have been right," Eddie said. "Bold Ruler was just as good in the Derby as he was in the Preakness. Maybe better, because I tell you he was like a wild horse going to that first turn."

No Blame From Mr. Fitz

"Mr. Fitz never blamed you after the Derby," Eddie was reminded. "I asked him before the Preakness if he had discovered any reason why the horse ran the way he did and he said 'No,' he couldn't explain it."

The rider laughed. "He wouldn't. I said to him after the Preakness, 'Boss, do you agree with me now that I gave you a bad ride in the Derby?' 'Well, Eddie,' he said, 'remember, it was my fault, too.'"

Slow-Motion Switch

"He's always like that," Arcaro said, "a real stand-up guy. If a jock thinks he's done a bad job, Mr. Fitz calls him up to cool him out. 'Son, I'm an old man,' he says, 'and I make so many mistakes.' Know what he always says just before a race? 'Eddie,' he says, 'I've done all I can. The rest is up to God and you.'"

"Instead of fighting Bold Ruler in the Preakness," a man said, "you raced Federal Hill to the clubhouse turn. Federal Hill was in front by a little when you passed the wire but you beat him into the turn."

"I wasn't exactly trying to race Federal Hill," Eddie said, "I was just trying to let Bold Ruler run his own race. After we put Federal Hill away and Iron Liege moved up in the backstretch, they tell me I drew away, but I didn't want to draw away there. I took hold of my horse to give him a breather on the far turn because he'd been going hard from the start. Then, when Iron Liege moved up again, I did open up."

Arcaro chuckled again.

"I can switch my stick in two strides," he said, "I've clocked myself — hit him right-handed, shuffle the reins and whip and hit left-handed two jumps later. Saturday it took me four strides to make the switch.

"I was in the stretch with two or three lengths and I switched the stick in slow motion. I was so damned afraid I'd drop it."
